I am working on a stock market portfolio and needed to colorize, Rotate, resize original images from a photo kit. I was able to accomplish these tasks easily with the powerful tools found in Photoshop CS6. This upgraded version is a great jump forward. I will now be able to do all the color correction steps needed to achieve the end product I am looking for. Plus the new features in Elements 9 (scenics, Raw support, print services, and easy integration with cloud storage) are now more a part of this new release. Not that I use it a lot, but once I import old Photoshop files, I want to have them open in PS, not in Elements when I'm doing work with them, so for that I made a keyboard shortcut using Keyboard Maestro. Just Ctrl+3 opens the file in PS, while Ctrl+4 opens the file in Elements. Very useful, especially for editing older files that you don't want to drag to the desktop and waste space. The biggest downfall for me, however, is the fact that Adobe stopped offering the software through their usual online market place, and the process for upgrading from 5 to 6 (essentially two versions) is confusing and nearly impossible. Luckily, the old YouTube tutorials are still available, but the upgrades are much more complex these days, and there is a steep learning curve. For the last few versions it seems like the window keeps moving. Just on a MacBook Pro. I can literally close the app just as people are posting their creations. Sometimes it doesn't close out though.
